

MAGIC CITY

*Miami's always been a party town. It still is—only now it's got thriving restaurant, art, and culture scenes to go with it.
Welcome to America's sexiest city.*

THE ULTIMATE PENTHOUSE

The Aston Martin Residences, rising from one of the last parcels of available land along Miami's waterfront, will be a 66-floor ultra-luxury skyscraper that will tower above its neighbors once completed. The building's design is borrowed partly from Aston Martin's own vehicles. Resident perks will include 24-hour valet service, an art gallery, a fitness center, movie theaters, and even an infinity pool, on the 55th floor.

Buyers of the property's pricier apartments will receive a special limited-edition Aston Martin "Miami Riverwalk" DB11. Only 47 units of the car will be produced, with customized interiors made from the finest materials. And the buyer of the $50 million penthouse will be handed one of the most sought-after cars on the planet: a $2.3 million Aston Martin Vulcan. That's what we call an amenity. —Keith Gordon

THE PARTY MOVES DOWNTOWN

Hot neighborhoods like Brickell in the core of Miami are pulling crowds from South Beach and beyond

Text by SHAYNE BENOWITZ

It's a Thursday night in Brickell. Diners at Komodo nibble on hamachi crudo as a wave of leggy young women parade through the dining room around them, filling up tables in a section inconspicuously presided over by a large security guard. David Grutman darts around the floor with the alertness of a regal hunting dog, nose in the air, iPhone in hand, anticipating the imminent arrival of the evening's VIP guests.

The managing partner of Miami Beach nightclubs LIV and Story, Grutman (see Q&A, page 50) opened Komodo in 2015 as his first foray into both the restaurant world and the rapidly developing Brickell financial district on Miami's mainland, located across Biscayne Bay from South Beach and adjacent to downtown, bordered by the Miami River. In recent years, Brickell has seen a boom in luxury condominiums, restaurants, and nightlife venues, making the area a desirable place to live and play, especially among Miami's young professionals.

Tonight at Komodo, Diddy is throwing a Welcome to Miami party for retired New York Yankees captain and new Miami Marlins co-owner Derek Jeter. In attendance are a cast of characters who regularly headline Grutman's establishments: DJ Khaled, Busta Rhymes, and French Montana. This is exactly what diners at Komodo are here for—a chance to rub elbows with the celebrities Grutman has famously befriended by throwing legendary parties in Miami for the past decade.

He initially saw potential in Brickell when he noticed guests were dining at popular restaurants like Zuma and Perricone's Marketplace & Cafe before going to the beach for his clubs. "I think they just want to go with the hot places, to tell you the truth," he says. "And for the first time ever, people see Miami has an urban area now and not just South Beach. It amazes me that people travel from all parts of Miami to go to Komodo, despite Brickell being known as more of a business and financial district. I never thought in a million years people would leave the beach and come over here."

On the way back to South Beach, there are more restaurants and bars in Brickell and downtown worth swinging by than ever before. A U.S. subsidiary of Hong Kong-based Swire Properties debuted the $1.05 billion mixed-use development Brickell City Centre, a high-end, alfresco shopping center with multiple restaurants, office towers, and condominiums, in November 2016.

But Don't Rule Out South Beach Just Yet...

Sure, downtown and Brickell are heating up, but South Beach will always be hot. Visitors in the know will always want a room at SLS South Beach or The Setai, a steak at Prime 112, or a table at LIV. But South Beach is also evolving. New hotels, restaurants, and nightlife are moving inland and away from the busiest stretches of Ocean Drive to hot spots like Collins Avenue and the area surrounding Collins Park, where boutique hotels are being built or refurbished. The Plymouth, for example, brings an art deco redesign to its property, featuring an outpost of NYC's acclaimed Blue Ribbon Sushi Bar & Grill and its famous fried chicken.

Kimpton Angler's Hotel offers pampered seclusion steps from the beach, featuring suites, lofts, two-story villas, and three-story poolside bungalows. The hotel is expanding and plans to have a new 85-room tower, complete with a rooftop pool, finished in early 2018. Washington Park Hotel, meanwhile, is an art deco refuge and home to the second outpost of New York's Employees Only, a speakeasy hidden in the venue's historic coral house. —KG

"Coming from a European background, in which apartment living was the norm, led me to develop here," says Ugo Colombo, a Milan-born developer who was one of the first to build luxury condominiums in Brickell back in the 1990s. "I saw a void in Miami's condo market because buyers typically associated 'luxury' with larger-style homes. So I set out to develop 'mansions in the sky,' a.k.a. large, luxury condominiums with water views, over-the-top amenities, security." Colombo's latest project, Brickell Flatiron, is slated to debut in 2019. "I always believed that sooner or later that area would become very attractive. It needed a catalyst like Brickell City Centre to really give it a boost."

Across the Miami River, downtown Miami is a neighborhood of contrasts. Historic beaux arts architecture and cozy hipster haunts abut cavernous warehouses turned after-hours nightclubs. The intersection of N. Miami Ave. and NW 11th St. offers a concentrated snapshot of this juxtaposition, where 1111 Miami, the 24-hour nightclub-cabaret, quasi-gentlemen's-club hybrid, is kitty-corner to Club Space, the city's long-standing after-hours techno club, which has been known to stay open continually.

But between these two megaclubs, a trio of homey bars and restaurants offer a completely different kind of night out. The Corner is a softly lit bar with large picture windows and rough-hewn wood paneling serving some of the city's most expertly mixed classic cocktails to an eclectic local crowd. A few doors down, Fooq's is an intimate restaurant specializing in global fare with Persian and Italian influences, where a wall of ephemera features both a Native American dream catcher and a Grateful Dead acid bear.

While the area is still on the rise, downtown is ripe for further development, and many see it as Miami's next It neighborhood. "As more people move in, you'll see increased demand for restaurants and shopping at the ground level," Colombo says. The Brightline high-speed rail service and its MiamiCentral station will connect downtown Miami to Fort Lauderdale and West Palm Beach before the end of the year, and the forthcoming, nearly 30-acre, $3 billion-plus Miami Worldcenter mixed-use development is slated for 2019, exponentially increasing the area's curb appeal.

As Grutman puts it, "There's a lot going on. Miami should be excited."
